
The Obesity Data Challenge is part of two parallel, prize-based competitions running in the United States and in England, where each country’s challenge participants can utilize and mash up open data to develop new data visualization tools to give communities, local health officials, patients, and practitioners new means to improve population health.

In the U.S. portion of the challenge, the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, the Health Data Consortium, and the de Beaumont Foundation are seeking solutions that enable public health and health care professionals to help patients and families address the obesity epidemic at a personal and community level. Innovative thinkers and anyone else with creative juices flowing to develop tools for health care providers and local health officials to work with patients and families to help address the obesity epidemic are encouraged to apply. $40,000 in prizes will be awarded!

To learn more about the details of the challenge, watch our informational webinar.

Thank you so much for your consideration!

Best,

Amy Chang
Program Assistant
Health Data Consortium
(o) 202-292-6704
www.healthdataconsortium.org
@hdconsortium